Screening

Definition:

Continuous projection of a full-length film from a photosensitive, magnetic, or digital recording media for an intended and predetermined duration.

In the case of projection of a multi-part film divided into episodes, a projection of each episode, which has its own credits and specified duration, is treated as a separate screening. In this event, the audience size is indicated analogically. A projection of a set of short movies (such as morning projections for children) is also classified as a screening.
